Port Alice History

In the traditional territory of the Quatsino First Nation, Port Alice was originally located 5 km south, where the historic pulp mill stands at the water's edge a century later.

In 1965, the town was relocated to Rumble Beach, and became British Columbia's first instant municipality.

Visible from the Sea Walk, original pilings from a logging float camp line a section of the shore.

Built in 1928, the 9-hole executive golf course sits above the mill, and hidden between is the Old Port Alice Cemetery, with markers dating back to 1917.
